

Charitable Giving

Converting an Asset to an Income Stream with a CRT

PRESENTED FOR

PRESENTED BY:

Charitable Giving

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

This information is provided by American General Life Insurance Company (AGL) and The United States Life Insurance Company in the City of New York (US Life), members of American International Group, Inc. (AIG).

The information contained in this document is general in nature and intended for educational purposes only and is not a comprehensive analysis of the topic presented. The information may be subject to change and should be verified for accuracy and reliability (e.g., federal income tax statutes, rulings, etc. that may have changed since publication) and may be subject to differing legal interpretations. While the publisher has been diligent in attempting to provide accurate information, the accuracy of the information cannot be guaranteed. No representation or warranty, express or implied, is made by AGL, US Life and its affiliates as to the completeness of the information in this document. AGL and US Life shall not be liable for any loss or damage caused by the use of, or reliance on, the tax, accounting, legal, investment or financial items contained in this material.

The Company, its financial professionals and other representatives are not authorized to give legal, tax or accounting advice. For advice concerning your situation, consult your professional attorney, tax advisor or accountant.

To ensure compliance with requirements imposed by U.S. Treasury Regulations, we inform you that any tax advice contained in this document (including any attachments) is not intended or written to be used, and cannot be used, for the purpose of (i) avoiding penalties under the Internal Revenue Code or (ii) promoting, marketing or recommending to another party any transaction or matter addressed herein.

©2017. All rights reserved.

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

A Dilemma...

- ◆ Some investors find themselves “locked into” assets they would rather sell. They own highly appreciated, low-yielding, non-performing assets—real estate or marketable securities—they are reluctant to sell because of the capital gains tax that would be incurred.
- ◆ Example: John bought a parcel of real estate several years ago that has more than doubled in value, but produces no income. John knows if he sells the property, he’ll incur capital gains taxes. Even if he succeeds in investing the after-tax proceeds for a higher return, the tax drain will significantly deplete his wealth.

A Solution...

- ◆ A charitable remainder trust (CRT) is an effective way to escape a “locked-in” position while meeting charitable giving goals.
- ◆ A CRT is a “split-interest” gift in which the trust pays an income to a donor (or someone else chosen by the donor) for a number of years. When the trust terminates, trust assets are distributed to a designated charity.
- ◆ Income payouts must be made at least annually from the trust, and may last for a specified term (up to 20 years), or for the lifetime of the named non-charitable beneficiaries.

The Process...

- ◆ Selling appreciated assets results in capital gains tax liability. The top federal tax rate runs from 20% for most capital assets held more than one year, to 25% on certain depreciable real estate, to 28% on collectibles held more than a year, to 39.6% for capital assets held for one year or less. Plus, higher-income taxpayers pay a 3.8% surtax on all net investment income—which includes capital gains.

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

- ◆ By contrast, appreciated property is not subject to capital gains tax when transferred to the trust, nor when the trustee sells the property. However, when the trust makes annual income payouts, a portion may be taxed as a long-term capital gain to the recipient.
- ◆ Example: John purchased real property for $125,000 several years ago. Today, it is worth $325,000. John could incur long-term capital gains tax of as much as $47,600 if he sold the property, resulting in only $277,400 of after-tax proceeds to invest. Alternatively, John can transfer the property to a CRT, defer these taxes and fund the trust with the full $325,000.
- ◆ After a CRT sells appreciated property, it can reinvest the proceeds. In addition, the donor may qualify for a federal income tax charitable deduction based on the present value of the charity's remainder interest. The donor can invest this tax savings as well as receive the income payout from the CRT, resulting in a potentially sizable increase in cash flow.
- ◆ Example: John transfers appreciated property to a CRT that will pay him 6% of the trust's initial value every year. In addition, he receives an immediate income tax charitable deduction that produces significant tax savings in his tax bracket, subject to certain limitations. He can also invest his tax savings and earn additional income.

Summing Up...

- ◆ With a CRT, a donor can convert an appreciated asset into an income stream, which can dramatically increase the donor's income by deferring capital gains taxes on the property transfer and on the trust's subsequent sale of the property.
- ◆ The donor also gets an immediate federal income tax charitable deduction for the present value of the charity's interest, and can invest the savings to generate additional income.
- ◆ Finally, the donor enjoys the personal satisfaction of making a significant contribution to charity.

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

The Bottom Line...

Transferring highly appreciated, non-income-producing property to a CRT—and enjoying the resulting federal tax savings—can accomplish the twin goals of building more retirement income while making a substantial gift to charity.

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

Summary

Investors sometimes find themselves “locked in” to investments they would rather sell. They hold low-yielding, highly appreciated property—such as real estate, marketable securities, etc.—but they balk at selling these assets because of the capital gains tax liability that would result.

A charitable remainder trust (CRT) can be a solution that will help investors escape taxes, generate retirement income and meet personal philanthropic goals

WHAT’S A CHARITABLE REMAINDER TRUST?

A CRT is a “split-interest” gift in which the trust pays an income to the donor (or someone chosen by the donor) for a number of years, then distributes the remainder of the trust assets to a designated charity. The income payout from the CRT may last for up to 20 years or for the lifetime of the named non-charitable beneficiaries. The trust must make income payouts at least annually, and when the trust term expires, the named charity receives the remaining assets.

WHAT ARE THE ADVANTAGES?

By transferring an appreciated asset to a CRT, a donor can convert an under-performing asset into an income stream. The typical result is:

- A dramatic increase in the donor’s income
- Deferral of capital gains taxes on both the transfer and the subsequent sale of the property by the CRT
- An immediate federal income tax charitable deduction
- The personal satisfaction that comes from making a significant contribution to charity

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

THE TAX PICTURE: SUMMING UP

Normally, selling appreciated assets results in capital gains tax liability on the excess of the selling price over the seller's basis. The top federal tax rate on realized capital gains ranges from a top rate of 20% for most capital assets held for more than one year, to 25% on certain depreciable real estate, to 28% for collectibles held more than a year, to 39.6% for assets held for one year or less. Plus, higher-income taxpayers pay a 3.8% surtax on all net investment income, and that includes capital gains.

By contrast, appreciated property transferred to a CRT is not subject to capital gains tax when the donor transfers property to the trust, nor when the trustee sells the property. It is important to note that part of each annual income payout may be taxed as capital gain to the donor.

After a CRT sells the appreciated property without incurring capital gains tax, it can invest the proceeds. In addition, the donor may qualify for a federal income tax charitable deduction based on the present value of the charity's remainder interest.

The overall benefit directly related to the donor's initial gift of low-yielding appreciated property to a CRT can be substantial—steady income payouts from the CRT, tax savings and the personal satisfaction that comes with making a significant gift to charity.

Charitable Giving

CONVERTING AN ASSET TO AN INCOME STREAM WITH A CRT

